Wilson's Princeton Room Now Famous

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 11.—With the election of Woodrow Wilson as the 28th president of the United States, a great many things in Princeton have assumed an historical value.

Chief among these is the room occupied by Woodrow Wilson, Princeton, 1879.

Valentine Ellicott, the sophomore who now occupies room No. 7 in Witherspoon hall, did not know when he got it that it was historic. When he put a black coat of paint on the mantle and put up his various carvings of initials and records of athletic victories, he fears that he covered up the initials "W. W. W."

Chief among these is the room occupied by Woodrow Wilson, Princeton, 1879.

"THE BROKEN LAW" IS A STRONG PLAY

One of the least known works of that world famous dramatist, Oscar Wilde, "The Broken Law," will be presented at the Oregon theater tonight by the English stars, Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude and strong supporting company of ten English players. The play is one of the most stirring modern dramas that is being presented on the American stage today, and shows the working of an entirely man made law, and it is in itself something of an argument for equal suffrage.

"One law for a man and another for a woman" is the main theme of the production, and the various situations deal largely with the one standard of morality demanded of a man and the different standard demanded of a woman. The play gives Miss Crawley scope for her wonderful emotional powers. Miss Crawley, who holds the world's record for one single audience played before 10,000 people at the Greek theater in Berkeley, Cal., and during her New York engagement was said by the New York Herald, one of the biggest papers in the country to be one of the greatest emotional actresses of the day. Miss Crawley possesses one of the most wonderful voices that has ever been heard west of New York, and is known in the east as the second Mrs. Patrick Campbell. Mr. Arthur Maude, who takes the part of Daventry has created a reputation in the east and middle west that carried him to the very front rank of the profession, and in the part of the gay husband shows in his best form. He takes the part of the polished but unfaithful English husband with an ease and grace that makes his audience almost wish he were good instead of very, very indifferent. Handsome and debonaire, having already a beautiful wife and magnificent home, yet not only spends his fortune too freely but loves too freely also, and in the opening scene he is shown telling his real wife that he has invited Lady Langham, who is a society lady of whom he is altogether too fond, to the house party of the Danbury. Mrs. Daventry very properly objects and rails him for breaking his promise, but it is all to no avail. Lady Langham has been invited, and Lady Langham comes.

The second act shows a wonderful scene in which Daventry gives the beautiful Lady Langham a considerable sum of money that he in turn has borrowed from a mutual friend of his and his wife. Having dined too well but not wisely he brings Lady Langham into his wife's boudoir that evening, not knowing that Mrs. Daventry is asleep behind the high screen. Overcome with his infatuation he locks the door and clasps the object of his affections in his arms and a strong love scene ensues, during the middle of which a loud rap is heard on the door and Sir George Langham clamors for entrance. The situation is to say the least embarrassing and is made worse by the screams of Lady Langham, when Mrs. Daventry sweeps superbly into the room and throws open the door, leaving her husband and the other lady aghast, while Sir George Langham can do nothing but murmur apologies and leave the room.

Finally, wearied and overcome by her husband's mode of life, Mrs. Daventry leaves him for good, and in the next act is seen in conversation with Ashurst, an old time friend. The last act of the play shows Mrs. Daventry and Ashurst in Monte Carlo, and as Ashurst says himself, the time has come, for Daventry, tiring of his love-making, has followed his wife and wants her to come back to him again. The close of the scene is one of the most wonderful pieces of acting that has ever been presented to an American audience and when Mrs. Daventry pleads for the life of the man she loves and begs her husband after wrecking her whole life and happiness to leave her something yet to live for, and finally crashes to the floor fainting, the audience is held spellbound by the situation. At the close Daventry stands over his prostrate wife gun in hand, ready to shoot her, but just in time remembers, and without a word walks from the room and a second later a shot is heard and he is dead.

HODGES, DEMOCRAT, IS GOVERNOR OF KANSAS
Topeka, Kan., Nov. 11.—With the official returns from 80 counties out of 105 in the state, John Hodges, democratic candidate for governor, has a lead of 368 votes over Arthur Capper, republican. Unofficial returns have been received from all other counties, and Capper concedes that Hodges has been elected. All of the republican state ticket, except Capper has probably been elected with the possible exception of Akers for state treasurer.

Describes Dynamiting.
Indianapolis, Nov. 11.—McManis, on the stand in the trial of the 47 laborites, resumed his story today. Two thirds of the spectators were women. The witness described the Mount Vernon mills dynamiting, saying he received nitro glycerine and an alarm clock from John J. McNamara in Chicago in April, 1910.

T. R. Gets California.
San Francisco, Nov. 11.—Roosevelt gets the state by between 875 and 844 votes, according to various computations. The total vote is estimated. Roosevelt 281,887; Wilson 280,943.

BURIAL VAULTS IN A SKYSCRAPER
Hearkening back to the customs of the ancient Egyptians, the inventors of a "skyscraper" form of mausoleum designs have been perfected for a 10-story, fireproof edifice, in the firm belief that the entombment method of burial is one of the sanitary requirements of the present era and soon will be in common demand if provided at a cost that shall not be prohibitive to all but the wealthy. Announcement of this modern adaptation method of burial to the skyscraper form of construction follows the recent organization of the United States Mausoleum Corporation in New York.

Up to the present time no site for the proposed mausoleums has been selected, but several in the suburbs of New York City are under consideration. Also, three prominent fraternal societies are now negotiating for the purpose of the mausoleums to contain respectively 532, 175 and 250 vaults, each vault to contain eight crypts, and to be in size 17 feet in depth, 7.5 feet in width and 12.6 feet in height.

It is proposed to build the mausoleum already designed ten stories in height, on a plot of ground containing the equivalent of 32 city lots, the height of the edifice to be 145 feet the whole to be steel skeleton construction and fireproof. It is estimated that the net cost of the 532 vault structure will be approximately $1,000,000, exclusive of the cost of the land.

Mayor's Salary is $16.
A flourishing town of ten houses, with a president as mayor, who gets $16 a year salary, has been found by Cortlandt Field Bishop of New York. This singular little community exists in the midwest republic of Andorra, on the southern slope of the Pyrenees, between France and Spain.

The inhabitants of the place, which is one of the largest in the republic, are apparently prosperous and happy.

The more a man practices economy the less popular he will be.

CIGARETTES TO BAR BOYS IN ATHLETES

Pasadena, Cal., Nov. 11.—J. M. Rhodes, superintendent of schools, declared that he would stop cigarette-smoking among high school boys, or else they would never participate in inter-school athletics.

In an order issued he prohibited any boy who smokes cigarettes from playing in the football or baseball teams or from engaging in any of the school sports.

School authorities declared cigarette smoking among boys whose ages ranged from 10 to 18 years as on the increase and that still more drastic steps would be taken to stop it.
